A GUIDE TO THE USE OF THESE DATA

The sample for the Cape Cod Residents' Survey was designed to permit town by town comparisons. Instead of sampling randomly so that the number of people who were selected to receive questionnaires is proportional to the size of the town, we sampled the same number of people in each town.

The total sample size for the questionnaire mailout was 4005, the largest size possible within our budget. Divided by the fifteen towns, however, this means that only 267 people were sampled in each town. The number of returned questionnaire was 2437, representing a response rate of 67 percent of the eligible households for the Cape as a whole.

The number of responses for each town varies from 100 to 195 depending on the quality of the address list and the response rate for that particular town. In some towns more questionnaires were returned by the post office with "addressee unknown" stamps than others. Table one of this appendix gives town by town data on the response rate.

It is important to take the small sample sizes into account in extrapolating from the findings reported here to the entire population for a given town. The sampling error for percentages based on 100 cases is 9-10 percent and for 200 cases it is 6-7 percent. This means that the observed result for Barnstable of 17 percent who said the quality of life in the summer is "very desirable" could actually be as low as 7 percent or as high as 27 percent. This is the error range. Put another way, 17 percent is the best estimate, plus or minus 9-10 percent.

In comparing the responses for one town with those for another, as a rough rule of thumb any difference must be at least as large as 12 percent to be statistically significant 95 times out of 100. Differences smaller than 12 percent may be due to chance variation owing to the relatively small size of the samples.

In what follows, each question is identified with a brief label. For the full text of the question see the questionnaire contained in Appendix B of the Cape Cod Residents Survey, Final Report (April 1991). This report also contains a description of the sampling procedures (Appendix A) and the findings for the Cape as a whole.
